Home and move-out cleaning | Centerpoint office | 555-0100

Subject: Mid-year pricing and operations

1. Summary

From July 1 we are raising the price of our recurring cleaning plans, by about 8% on average. We are also setting a standard for how closely crews keep to scheduled time. This memo explains both, says how we will judge the increase at the end of September, and lists our current prices.

2. The July price increase

What changes. On July 1 most plans' price per visit goes up by 5% to 11%, depending on the package and the home: about 8% on average. A plan that renews later in July changes on its renewal date. Every customer gets written notice by June 16, as our service agreement requires.

Why. Our costs have risen faster than our prices:

- Wages: the yearly pay rises for crew members and crew leads.
- Supplies: cleaning products and equipment cost more than a year ago.
- Visits running long: from January to May, staff time on site ran 4.9% over scheduled time, and we pay for that time.

What we expect. Some customers will cancel. We expect no more than 20 cancellations beyond our usual rate over July to September. If every plan stays, the increase adds about $156,000 a year.

3. How we will judge the increase

At the end of September we will work out three figures from the plan records:

- A. Extra cancellations: plans cancelled in July to September, less three times the monthly average for January to June.
- B. What they cost us: the yearly value of the plans cancelled in July to September, less three times the January to June monthly average. A plan's yearly value is its price per visit times its visits a year (the table below).
- C. What the increase brings: the yearly value the July increases add on the plans still active on September 30 (each increase per visit, times visits a year).

The increase has paid off if C is more than B.

Plan frequency	Visits a year
Weekly	52
Every two weeks	26
Monthly	12

4. Schedule standard

Every visit is booked for a set time, and each person on the crew is scheduled for that time. From July the standard is: a crew's total staff time on site in a month stays within 8% of its scheduled staff time (each visit's scheduled minutes times the people on it). Time over schedule is paid at each person's hourly rate; a visit that finishes early counts against it. A crew more than 8% over in a month gets a schedule review with me.

5. Current prices

List prices for new bookings, per visit. They stay as below for the rest of the year. The base price is for a typical home; the price for a home is set at booking, by its size and how often we visit.
